

6th HLTP

Hepatologist in a Liver Transplant Program Course

The European
Liver and Intestine
Transplant Association

PADUA, ITALY - 24-25 OCTOBER 2024

OBJECTIVE

Liver transplantation has been accepted as the sole therapy for acute and chronic liver failure from different etiologies and several types of liver cancer, with excellent results and rates of survival in the long-term. The increasing success on this issue is attributable to the progress achieved over time with new immunosuppressive drugs and storage grafts solutions, hepatology and liver surgery, intensive care and infectious disease transplant specialists. Early diagnosis and the correct management of complications represent these crucial steps. The improvement of knowledge in this area involves constant updating as well as thorough medical, cultural and ethical preparation by all the professionals engaged in the liver transplant procedure. The course has the main objective of expanding the knowledge related to end-stage liver diseases and to liver transplantation, sensitising the trainers in Transplant Hepatology towards a multidisciplinary approach, increasing the interest in the field, the ability of an adequate referral of potential liver candidates and satisfactory clinical skills. The course is organised as a two-day meeting. The programme includes a mix of lectures, case discussions and interactive presentations. The programme of the 6th edition of HLTP Course will focus mainly on the management of acute and chronic decompensated liver disease, on emerging and challenging indications for liver transplantation, on surgical and innovative techniques implemented to deal with donor shortage and on long-term management of liver transplanted patients.
